Draperies, curtains, slipcovers, lamp shades and other accessories may be changed from time to time, at not too great an expense, but floor coverings, because of their initial cost, are expected to serve satisfactorily as part of the home furnishing for a long

When buying rugs or carpets there are three major points to consider in addition to the quality. These are the size, the color and the type.
Size: In selecting rugs the question of size is very important. If a rug is too small it affects the visual size of the room and tends to crowd the grouping of the furniture. In the average room, the rug should not have more than a foot of floor margin.

Wall-to-wall carpeting makes a smooth background for any room. It will add inches to the apparent size of a room or group of rooms and also help disguise any architectural defects.

Room-size rugs look like walito-wall carpeting when they reach within six inches of the Color: Colors for walls, draperies and upholstery fabrics may be taken from the colors in the pattern of the rug. Dark floor covering will make a room appear smaller just as light colors on the floor will give it an air of greater spaciousness.

WESTERN EUROPE'S ECONOMY

Red hopes that Western Europe would go broke trying to re-arm, thus driving millions of new recruits into the camps of the revolutionaries, have so far been thwarted. But the picture still isn't rosy.

Trying to produce guns and butter at the same time has been a tough problem for the NATO countries' economic planners. As of right now, however, they are doing much better than might have been expected of

Prices in Europe have continued to rise slowly, but most of the western nations are keeping them in hand. Most wages have been able to keep pace with prices.

John Public is still living at a fair standard in most countries, despite dire predictions. The defense build-up hasn't bettered his lot-it has probably made it a tiny bit worse-but it also hasn't ruined him or sent him running for comfort to the Commies.

The threat of an economic crack-up is still acute. While anti-inflationary steps have been able to keep the lid on, they have also led to a slowdown in several important fields and many observers are pointing to the prospect of heavy unemployment within a

Another cause for worry has been a weakening in Europe's overseas trade relations. After showing a slight spurt in 1951, industrial exports are on the downgrade again. European products are meeting stiff sales resistance at the ends of the shipping lanes. And intra-Europe trade has also shown a drop from last year's figures.

The first to gripe about the economic pinch has been France. The French are saying that the military build-up has put a marked strain on their economy. If they don't receive more aid from the U.S., they warn, they'll have to slow down on the defense program.

A slowdown also threatens in Britain, which is currently having another case of the jitters. There, as in France, the government knows it must come up with a solution for its economic ills or go down. And the regime replacing it might not be so friendly to either America or the rearmament schemes.

Other NATO members are in similar position. 'Many experts believe that the antiinflationary moves were too late in getting started and that the present good results merely represent the calm before the storm.

It is apparent, they say, that the job of keeping things on a fairly even keel financially, as is being done now, cannot be accomplished by internal financial policy alone. Europe's currencies must be sharply readjusted to changed world conditions and its wares must get a better break at overseas trade markets.

Until this is done, the free world will make a very large mistake if it finds too much joy in present conditions and takes the continued success of the Western Europe defense plans for granted.

MORE PEOPLE

The latest figures on the world's future population show that the number of people inhabiting the earth will total about four billion in 2,000 A.D., according to George Cressey of Syracuse University. This is a large number and we would probably not be able to feed so many today. But no doubt agricultural methods will have improved so much by that time that feeding them will be possible.

Cressey believes the food-raising potential of the earth is enough to take care of this the final advice of the booklet: total which is almost double that of those living today. Some of Cressey's fellow scientists do not agree with him. They say the increase in population will put a terrible strain on our food supplies.

Not all scientists realize that with atomic bombs, germ warfare and hydrogen bombs, together with possible new epidemics, we may not be able to fulfil the population estimates. We may not even be here at all.

But we kind of think we will - and be eating, too.

'These Days' By GEORGE SOKOLSKY

One of the subjects not discussed by either party in the present compaign is the tariff, which is regarded as an old-fashioned item more suitable to the era of William McKinley. Nevertheless, the question of flooding the United States with European and Asiatic goods, produced by cheap labor, subsidized by governments, and salable at lower non-competitive prices in this market, must be considered.

THE TARIFF AGAIN

Ambassador William H. Draper, Jr., the United States Special Representative in Europe, in his semi-annual report, raised the issue of the tariff as one that Europe cannot ignore. He said:

"Western Europe must steadily become more productive, and produce at more competitive prices. European producers need within Europe a market that is both wider and deeper, in which the spur of competition and new opportunity would yield major gains in higher productivity and lower prices. . . . Existing trade restrictions and cartel arrangements fail to stimulate either mass production or mass selling. "

He said that the United States must face hard facts. The question that confronts us is whether we should continue to dump capital and goods into Europe, or continue subsidies to European governments, or buy more goods in Europe for sale in the United States. Shall we admit more British chinaware, more Swiss watches, more French and

Italian cloths, all in competition with our own?

One of our domestic problems is total employment. It is the intention of the American people that never again are we to witness from 10,000,-000 to 12,000,000 unemployed. This enormity in our economy continued from 1930 to about 1940 and was terminated by war. Full employment was achieved during the war period; after 1945, it was continued by shortages in the domestic market, by the Marsha'l Plan, by European military aid and by the Korean War-

The question naturally arises whether those who govern us have no other solution for our domestic problem of full employment than war or the preparation for war. While it is true that we have prospered under those conditions, it is equally and more emphatically true that we have lost lives and wealth and burdened ourselves with high taxes and with a national debt. It is unbelievable that our economy must be dependent upon war conditions for stability, just as it is unbelievable that this country must remain in a state of permanent war. Ambassador Draper's proposal is:

. . Among other methods to this end, I would suggest reaffirmation and extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements program, enactment of the proposed legislation for simplified customs procedures, and the progressive lowering of other import restrictions and duties. Such a policy would increase Europe's capacity to pay without correspondingly reducing our exports. I believe adopt-tion of this policy would directly benefit the United States by increasing its economic and eventually its military security. . . ."

This is an excellent program for Europe, but what would it do to the wage scale in the United States? What would it do to the smaller Americal States? What would it do to the small what would it do to the wage scale in the United government bounties?

These question cannot be answered "Yes" or 'No." It is not that simple. For instance, in Mark Hanna's time, American industry was united in support of a high tariff. That is not so today. Many elements in American industry, particularly big industry, favor interventionist activities in Europe because it is good business, providing for large productivity and full employment. It makes the government of the United States the principal customer of these heavy industries

Small industrialists, particularly those engaged in the manufacture of consumers' goods, fear present tendencies as likely to squeeze them out of business altogether. They note the reconstruction and modernization of European industries with American money or counterpart funds as imperilling their future if American markets are to be flooded with European-made consumers' goods. The chinaware and watch industries have already suffered from this type of competition,

Across this discussion runs the political problem of the support of our allies so that they can defend themselves against Soviet Russia. In all European countries, a neutralist position has developed, designed to free those countries from their responsibilities and obligations to the United States. Aneurin Bevan is typical of the European politician who supports a neutralist position. Stalin believes that he can break up the North Atlantic Alliance because of these issues.

GETTING READY TO RETIRE

I have written before about motoring past an elderly man with long white whiskers who was driving a spirited team of horses attached to a wagon carrying a full load of lumber. I felt sorry for him. I thought of his being out in all kinds of weather and handling lumber of varying weights and lengths. Within a matter of seconds I saw a haven't always realized that his- trusting the military. My pity for the driver Truman's last transcontinental pointed so many generals to top of the lumber wagon vanished and was transferred to the "retired" man, who certainly was not as rugged or enjoying as good health.

Fortunaely, this matter of continuing some useful occupation or avocation when retirement age arrives is now receiving the attention it deserves because there are more elderly men and women than people in any other group

One of the hopeful signs today is to see how employers interview their workmen a few months before they retire, to ascertain what they are going to do with their time, now that their working days are over as far as the industry is concerned.

In a booklet written by Kathryn Close, entitled "Getting Ready to Retire," and published by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., a non-profit educational organization, some valuable advice is given. The booklet points out that physical decline does not begin with everybody at exactly the same time of life nor take its toll of vigor at the same

Red hopes that Western Europe would go broke trying to re-arm, thus driving millions of new recruits into the camps of the revolutionaries, have so far been thwarted. But the picture still isn't rosy.

Trying to produce guns and butter at the same time has been a tough problem for the NATO countries' economic planners. As of right now, however, they are doing much better than might have been expected of them.

Prices in Europe have continued to rise slowly, but most of the western nations are keeping them in hand. Most wages have been able to keep pace with prices.

John Public is still living at a fair standard in most countries, despite dire predictions. The defense build-up hasn't bettered his lot-it has probably made it a tiny bit worse-but it also hasn't ruined him or sent him running for comfort to the Commies.

The threat of an economic crack-up is still acute. While anti-inflationary steps have can industries which could not compete with Eurobeen able to keep the lid on, they have also led to a slowdown in several important fields and many observers are pointing to the prospect of heavy unemployment within a year or so.

Another cause for worry has been a weakening in Europe's overseas trade relations. After showing a slight spurt in 1951, industrial exports are on the downgrade again. European products are meeting stiff sales resistance at the ends of the shipping lanes. And intra-Europe trade has also shown a drop from last year's figures.

The first to gripe about the economic pinch has been France. The French are saying that the military build-up has put a marked strain on their economy. If they don't receive more aid from the U.S., they warn, they'll have to slow down on the defense

A slowdown also threatens in Britain, which is currently having another case of the jitters. There, as in France, the government knows it must come up with a solution for its economic ills or go down. And the regime replacing it might not be so friendly to either America or the rearmament

Other NATO members are in similar position. 'Many experts believe that the antiinflationary moves were too late in getting started and that the present good results merely represent the calm before the storm.

It is apparent, they say, that the job of keeping things on a fairly even keel financially, as is being done now, cannot be accomplished by internal financial policy alone. Europe's currencies must be sharply readjusted to changed world conditions and its wares must get a better break at overseas trade markets.

Until this is done, the free world will make a very large mistake if it finds too much joy in present conditions and takes the continued success of the Western Europe defense plans for granted.

MORE PEOPLE

The latest figures on the world's future population show that the number of people inhabiting the earth will total about four billion in 2,000 A.D., according to George Cressey of Syracuse University. This is a large number and we would probably not be able to feed so many today. But no doubt agricultural methods will have improved so much by that time that feeding them will be Cressey believes the food-raising potential of the earth is enough to take care of this total which is almost double that of those living today. Some of Cressey's fellow scientists do not agree with him. They say the increase in population will put a terrible strain on our food supplies.

Not all scientists realize that with atomic bombs, germ warfare and hydrogen bombs, together with possible new epidemics, we may not be able to fulfil the population estimates. We may not even be here at all.

But we kind of think we will - and be

THE TARIFF AGAIN

One of the subjects not discussed by either party in the present compaign is the tariff, which is regarded as an old-fashioned item more suitable to the era of William McKinley. Nevertheless, the question of flooding the United States with European and Asiatic goods, produced by cheap labor, subsidized by governments, and salable at lower non-competitive prices in this market, must be considered.

Ambassador William H. Draper, Jr., the United States Special Representative in Europe, in his semi-annual report, raised the issue of the tariff as one that Europe cannot ignore. He said:

"Western Europe must steadily become more productive, and produce at more competitive prices. European producers need within Europe a market that is both wider and deeper, in which the spur of competition and new opportunity would yield major gains in higher productivity and lower prices. . . Existing trade restrictions and cartel arrangements fail to stimulate either mass production or mass selling. . . "."

He said that the United States must face hard facts. The question that confronts us is whether we should continue to dump capital and goods into Europe, or continue subsidies to European governments, or buy more goods in Europe for sale in the United States. Shall we admit more British chinaware, more Swiss watches, more French and

Italian cloths, all in competition with our own?
One of our domestic problems is total employment. It is the intention of the American people that never again are we to witness from 10,000,-000 to 12,000,000 unemployed. This enormity in our economy continued from 1930 to about 1940 and was terminated by war. Full employment was achieved during the war period; after 1945, it was continued by shortages in the domestic market, by the Marsha'l Plan, by European military aid and by the Korean War.

The question naturally arises whether those who govern us have no other solution for our domestic problem of full employment than war or the preparation for war. While it is true that we have prospered under those conditions, it is equally and more emphatically true that we have lost lives and wealth and burdened ourselves with high taxes and with a national debt. It is unbelievable that our economy must be dependent upon war conditions for stability, just as it is unbelievable that this country must remain in a state of permanent war. Ambassador Draper's proposal is:

. . Among other methods to this end, I would suggest reaffirmation and extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements program, enactment of the proposed legislation for simplified customs procedures, and the progressive lowering of other import restrictions and duties. Such a policy would increase Europe's capacity to pay without corre-States by increasing its economic and eventually

This is an excellent program for Europe, but This is an excellent program for Europe, but what would it do to the wage scale in the United lady in Utah remarked: "Do you As a matter of fact, I don't with them. One of the first was the dummy. This set up the ten Rondout. Anyone coming from up what would it do to the wage scale in the United States? What would it do to the smaller American industries which could not compete with Eurocan industries which could not compete with Eurocan goods produced at low wages and subsidized produced produced at low wages and subsidized produced produc

These question cannot be answered "Yes" or President's life! 'No." It is not that simple. For instance, in Mark Hanna's time, American industry was united in support of a high tariff. That is not so today. Many elements in American industry, particularly big industry, favor interventionist activities in Europe because it is good business, providing for mire the courage of a man who, large productivity and full employment. It makes at the age of 68, is up-early-andthe government of the United States the principal customer of these heavy industries.

Small industrialists, particularly those engaged fervently believes in. the manufacture of consumers' goods, fear present tendencies as likely to squeeze them out of business altogether. They note the reconstruction and modernization of European industries with American money or counterpart funds as imperilling their future if American markets are to be flooded with European-made consumers' goods. The chinaware and watch industries have already suffered from this type of competition, Across this discussion runs the political problem of the support of our allies so that they can defend themselves against Soviet Russia. In all European countries, a neutralist position has developed, designed to free those countries from their responsibilities and obligations to the United States. Aneurin Bevan is typical of the European politician who supports a neutralist position. Stalin believes that he can break up the North Atlantic

Alliance because of these issues. (Copyright, 1952. King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

GETTING READY TO RETIRE

By JAMES W. BARTON, M.D.

I have written before about motoring past an elderly man with long white whiskers who was driving a spirited team of horses attached to a wagon carrying a full load of lumber. I felt sorry for him. I thought of his being out in all kinds of weather and handling lumber of varying weights and lengths. Within a matter of seconds I saw a haven't always realized that his- trusting the military. In a booklet written by Kathryn Close, entitled 'Getting Ready to Retire," and published by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., a non-profit educational organization, some valuable advice is given. The booklet points out that physical decline does not begin with everybody at exactly the same time of life nor take its toll of vigor at the same rate of speed.

Kingston High spotted Middletown the first two places in their cross country meet yesterday at Middletown, but placed seven consecutive runners from third through the ninth position to win the meet, 25 to 36. The victory, Kingston's first in three starts this season, reflected intensive workouts during the week by Coach G. Kias. The Mamentor had consistently bunching poorly. Yesterday they took heed and it payed off with a

Last night Mrs. Burnett stole the spotlight from her distinguished contemporaries by pounding a brilliant 605 series in the Women's Classic at the Bowlodrome.

She opened with 200 flat. Then came a 181 and string of strikes for a 224 finale. The 605 enabled her to outdistance the field by a handsome margin and indicated she is back in the groove after some slight faltering in the early weeks of the campaign.

Giles, Massa Star

Exploding off the "T" with speed and finesse that was missing earlier in the season, the Burkemen got off to a characteristically fast start with a devastating display of running power. The flying cleats of Orville Giles, who accounted for three TDs and hard running Gene Massa, enabled Kingston to trounce a representative Metropolitan high school squad with such finality that the future looks rosy and the Thanksgiving Day battle with Newburgh figures to be one of the greatest in years. Giles burst 30 yards off tackle for one score, plunged from the 1-Curtis scoring: C. Klumback foot line for another and romped 29-yards on a quick opener. Massa Giles (1-foot buck); Massa (80reeled off a spectacular 80-yard yard punt return); Giles (30-yards punt return to account for the off tackle); Giles (29 yards on other Kingston TD. The Burkemen picked up 261 yards rushing and disregarded the pass. They tried two and failed to complete any, although John Kozlowski was out in the open with a TD ahead of him when he dropped the first pass.

Kingston, using straight running burts off the tackles and an occasional thrust at the ends, marched 80 yards in 11 plays from the opening kickoff, with Giles ramming over from the 1foot line. Giles was particularly effective with two nifty runs on this march. Massa's 80-yard return of a punt that sent Kingston ahead to stay with a thing of beauty. He caught the ball on the Kingston 20 and headed toward the sideline. About the 35 he appeared to be completely hemmed in, but Kingston blockers were doing a vicious job and in a moment Massa emerged from the pack, catwalking along the Curtis sideline. He sped all the way with a couple of Indians chasing him in
